Greg,

I can hardly believe almost a year has passed! I would like to share a little about my experience with other possible clients of yours:

Almost one year ago, I was faced with some very tough decisions. My health had been on a steady decline for several months, I was no longer able to work, and my husband and I had decided to separate. Without my income, finances were tight. To make matters worse, my home was still undergoing some major renovations. Renovations I could no longer afford.

I considered putting my house on the market and spoke to a realtor. Although it would probably sell to a wholesale buyer or someone who wanted and could afford to complete the renovations, I was quite exhausted and just didn't want to bother with it.

I called four different companies that offered services like Creative Asset Management, Inc. One of the companies offered me nothing, just give them the deed, and walk away. Another offered to put my daughter and I in an apartment for two months and walk away without any proceeds. The third company was not interested due to the amount of renovation needed and the fourth company never called me back.

When I called Creative Asset Management, Inc. Greg answered the phone. He asked a lot of questions and offered to come see my home immediately. When Greg arrived he was prepared to make an offer. We toured my home, sat down, and talked about the options in which he could offer. I was both surprised and skeptical. But I knew I could not beat the offer he had provided given the fact that I had to do nothing but move out.

Once we arrived at the attorney's office, I was reassured that I had made the correct decision purely by the actions of the attorney. All paperwork was thoroughly explained, any needed corrections were made, and the arrangement for payment was confirmed.

So why did I wait a year before writing a letter of recommendation? Like I said before, I was skeptical. I wanted to be sure that all details on Greg Norman's end were completed also. And as I expected, they were. I recently recommended a close friend of mine to Greg. He purchased her home just last week. Had I not had the options Greg gave me I am sure that my home would have eventually foreclosed and my daughter and I would not have had the proceeds from the sale of my home which have allowed us to live quite comfortably for the past year.

Is the option I chose for everyone? No, Look at all of your options. Greg can usually offer more than one. Should you be skeptical? Yes, as with any large transaction. Would I recommend his services? Of course, I already have.

Feel free to ask Greg to have me contact you. I would be happy to discuss my experience.
